Christians and people of faith were central to the climate demonstrations, marches and protests that happened around COP26. More and more churches are becoming eco-congregations and demanding that their denominations divest from fossil fuels, but we still have much to do.

This is a critical decade for climate justice, where churches need to listen to one another and share ideas about how we can make campaigning for climate justice an even bigger deal.

With others such as Christian Aid and the Climate Coalition, we should

- continue to hold the Government to account on promises made and broken
- campaign on loss and damage
- Work on ways forward for climate justice
